

10 bachelorette party destinations that aren't Las Vegas

Ashley Rossi

Whether you're a soon-to-be bride or the maid of honor, the best bachelorette party destinations are the ones that have something to please everyone in the bridal party. From a secluded New England island to a city tucked away in the Appalachian Mountains, these non-Vegas destinations are the perfect spots to celebrate the future Mrs.

San Diego

California's most underrated city is one of the best places to go for a bachelorette party at any time of year. Between outdoor hiking in Torrey Pines to island-hopping and spas, you can do just about anything in this coastal city.

For entertainment, look no further than San Diego's Gaslamp Quarter for rooftop bars, live music and nightclubs. The area also offers trendy eateries, shopping and art galleries. During the day, enjoy the Del Mar and La Jolla areas for outdoor dining and beaches. Pacific Beach and Mission Beach are great for people-watching and beach bars. Other bachelorette party ideas in San Diego to enjoy the outdoors include hiking Torrey Pines State Reserve, relaxing at Moonlight Beach, and riding bikes on nearby Coronado Island.

Stay on the tip of Shelter Island at Kona Kai Resort & Spa for an island retreat in the heart of the city's best attractions. You'll enjoy a private beach complete with fire pits, lounge chairs and drink service. The resort also has a pool with cabanas and an exotic-treatment spa for some relaxation.

San Diego: Between outdoor hiking in Torrey Pines to island-hopping and spas, you can do just about anything in this coastal city. For entertainment, look no further than San Diego's Gaslamp Quarter for rooftop bars, live music and nightclubs. The area also offers trendy eateries, shopping and art galleries. During the day, enjoy